Why You Should Study Chinese in Shanghai or Beijing?

by Thomasgalvin

Article published on March 6th 2012 | Language

Both Shanghai and Beijing have much to offer prospective students. As such, any article discussing the reasons to study Chinese in Shanghai could very easily become a tourist brochure. At the same time it goes without saying that China can be a very daunting place for the first time visitor, and especially for someone wanting to learn Chinese through cultural immersion. Therefore it is important to look at the features of Shanghai and Beijing within the context of how they will help a student to learn Chinese.

When choosing between Shanghai and Beijing it is important to consider which city you would feel most comfortable living in. Learning a new language can be difficult enough, but it is ten times worse if you don't like your surroundings. Anyone studying Chinese in China will learn much more quickly and easily if they get out and about. And as we will see both Shanghai and Beijing offer many opportunities to the student who is willing to explore.

The first step for anyone considering studying in China should be the resources offered by useful websites such as nextstepchina.org. These websites truly provide you with a stepping stone you can use to learn about China. There are many good reasons to study Chinese in Shanghai but possibly the following are the best five.

First, Shanghai is regarded as somewhat of a mecca for overseas students. In 2002, 13,081 students from over 100 countries came to Shanghai to study. It is also important to note that Shanghai is home to the prestigious Shanghai Jiao Tong University.

Second, Shanghai is one of China's most vibrant cities. If you want to experience what modern China is about this is definitely to place to be.

Third, unsurprisingly, for such a modern and bustling metropolis, Shanghai also boasts an impressive cultural scene. In fact, in addition to the internationally renowned Shanghai Art Museum, there are 1000 private art galleries in the city.

Fourth, a short distance from Shanghai are major tourist sites such as the beautiful and historic town of Zhujiajiao.

Finally, if shopping is more your thing, you will be pleased to know that Shanghai is regarded as the premier shopping city in China.

These are just a few reasons to study Chinese in Shanghai.

A strong rival to Shanghai is the Chinese capital Beijing. Therefore it is no surprise that many foreign students decide to study Chinese in Beijing. And just like Shanghai, Beijing boasts many features. Here are five of them.

First, as the capital, there is no lack of things to do. From Sports Centers to Martial Arts schools, Beijing has it all. All you have to do is decide where to start.

Second, eating out in Beijing is amazingly cheap and the food tastes great. This is the perfect reason to get out and explore.

Third, is one of the most impressive sights the country has to offer. The Ming Tombs are the final resting place of 13 of the 16 Ming Emperors.

Fourth, if that sounds a bit morbid, you will be glad to know that Great Wall tours are often combined with tours of the Ming Tombs.

Finally, it's the capital. That in itself is a really good reason to study Chinese in Beijing.

If all of this information leaves you more bewildered than enlightened don't hesitate to visit nextstepchina.org or a similar website where you can find out much more about both cities. This will make it much easier to decide whether to study Chinese in Shanghai or Beijing.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/language-articles/why-you-should-study-chinese-in-shanghai-or-beijing.htm - Article Side

Thomasgalvin - About Author:
Find a study Chinese in Shanghai and a Study Chinese Beijing related information at a www.nextstepchina.org/

Article Keywords:
study abroad in china,study in china

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!