Is an uncontested divorce right for you?

by Danielle Paige

Article published on January 6th 2012 | Law

Working with a divorce lawyer in Atlanta is often a good idea for couples who are considering a break-up. Times have changed over the last few decades, and people have changed right along with them. Today, many couples are opting for an uncontested divorce when certain conditions can be met. There are some very good reasons some couples choose this type of divorce over a contested divorce.

Perhaps one of the most popular reasons couples are choosing uncontested divorces is because this type of divorce can move through the system very quickly. In many cases, this type of divorce does not require court involvement, or very little involvement. Another reason many couples choose an uncontested divorce is because in relative terms it is far less expensive than a contested divorce. And the last reason these types of divorces are as popular as they are is because they are less emotionally stressful. Couples, generally, are not adversaries when they file this way. But there are some conditions that couples must agree to before they can file for an uncontested divorce.

The most important condition is that couples must have agreed to various issues beforehand. These issues can vary but usually consist of division of martial property, division of martial assets, child custody and support issues and other issues that an Atlanta Uncontested Divorce lawyer can explain to the couple. If one spouse disputes any of these issues, then the couple cannot file for this type of divorce.

In an uncontested divorce, couples will work out these issues, often with an Atlanta divorce lawyer present, and have their agreement drafted into what is known as a divorce settlement agreement. This is a key element to any uncontested divorce as it set forth what each person is responsible for and what they are not responsible for. The settlement agreement, in effect, attempts to resolve any and all issues that are current or that might arise in the future. Because this agreement is so crucial for both parties, working with an experienced divorce lawyer during this phase is critical for the best possible results.

For those seeking an uncontested divorce, or any other type of divorce, consultation with a qualified attorney is often a good first step. He or she may be able to explain the process, answer questions and assist in drafting any settlement agreements once the couple has decided how they want to proceed with issues such a property division, child custody, etc.

In a contested divorce, one spouse must file a complaint. That complaint is then served by the sheriff to the other spouse. In an uncontested divorce, it is not necessary for the law to serve a complaint on the other spouse as long as the receiving spouse acknowledges the service. This can be very beneficial in keeping couples in a non-confrontational state of mind.

For those considering an uncontested divorce, a consultation with an Atlanta Divorce Law Firm may be the best first step to take. These professionals can answer whatever questions you and your spouse may have. He or she will also be able to help draft up the filing as well as the settlement agreement.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/law-articles/is-an-uncontested-divorce-right-for-you.htm - Article Side

Danielle Paige - About Author:
Even if a couple is considering an uncontested divorce, they may benefit by speaking with an a Atlanta Uncontested Divorce lawyer. An experienced attorney can explain just how this type of divorce works. To learn more, visit the a Atlanta Divorce Law Firm .

Article Keywords:
atlanta divorce lawyer, atlanta divorce attorney, divorce lawyer in atlanta, atlanta divorce law firm, atlanta uncontested divorce

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!