Patent Attorneys- Demand Rising with Time by James Blee

Article published on January 19th 2012 | Law

Talking of a legal profession, the present situation is grim to say the least. With the rising number of lawyers, the job prospects unfortunately has not gone up proportionately leading to an imbalance amongst the percentage growth of lawyers and rise in employment opportunities. At the same time, the competition between the prospective job seekers has intensified. However, the story of the patent attorneys has completely been the other way round. While job scopes of the lawyers in US is no more than a paltry three percent, the attorneys enjoys a annual scope of as high as fifteen percent.

With rising demand, it is regarded to be one of the best professional fields of today. It is however strange that a big majority of professionals come from technical backgrounds such as science or engineering. The numbers of experienced professionals operating in this sector is rather on the lower side till date which makes the law firms waste no time in getting them hired for the firms.

Furthermore, with the upcoming of the America Invents Act, the patent related business is in a state of confusion and jeopardy which has forced the companies to seek the assistance of experienced professional who can help in safeguarding their interests and secure their rights.

At present, there is a requirement of over 1400 patent attorneys in the US with new vacancies springing out almost regularly. . Apart from the professionals with a technical background, even the scholars possessing a doctorate degree can practice in this sector. Inclusion of a more relevant law degree is always beneficial and will help to bag better cases and higher remunerations.
