Potholes, uneven road surfaces and debris are just one of the few road hazards, which a motorcycle driver may encounter along the way. These hazards are commonly one of the reasons for the road accidents and fatalities related to motorcyclists. In fact, in 2009, out of 33,808 traffic fatalities in the United States, 4,462 of them were riders. Though there is a drop from the 5,312 deaths of the previous year, one can ponder how rampant motorcycle accidents could still be.

There are a lot of things that one can do to ensure that the experience of riding a motorcycle is safe enough and free from hassles. Though it cannot be avoided that the mentioned road hazards are commonplace in todayâ€™s roads, one should not stop short of just being careful while on the road. One should also obey the rules of the road and practice courtesy towards other motorists.

Preparing for the Road

Whether it is a short trip to a friendâ€™s house or going on a camping trip at the countryside with your peers in motorcycles, preparing should always be the first thing to do. Depending on the trip, it is significant to bring all of the necessary items needed, including a first-aid kit and a mobile phone in case of emergency.

Keeping the motorcycle well maintained is also important, even if the motorbike is not in use for quite some time. The brakes, lights on both the front and rear, and all other systems should be checked if they are working properly. Failures and breakdowns cannot be prevented while on the road, but those possibilities can be prohibited by keeping the motorcycle well cared for

Before starting the engine, the driver, as well as the passenger whom is going along, must be properly seated. Both of them should be wearing helmets. Almost all of the states in the U.S. have their own helmet laws, so one should be well aware of it, as this will ensure the rider and the passenger of their safety from a possible mishap.

Defensive Driving is Important

Now that the motorbike is taken on the road, the driver must ensure that he is exercising safety. Practicing defensive driving should take place in this stage, wherein the driver should maintain focus and awareness towards other motorists. Being mindful of the surroundings as well as on other road hazards since this will help reduce the risk of an accident.

Here are some of the ways that anyone can exercise in doing defensive driving:

â€¢ Mobile phones must be kept while driving. Using it while on the go is obviously a dangerous thing to do.

â€¢ It is not enough to just stare on the road ahead; it is also important to keep the eyes moving for any hazards and passing motorists.

â€¢ Being tired while on the road can turn into drowsiness. Pulling over on the side of the road is recommended for the driver to be able to get himself some rest.

Since this means of transportation is more likely to cause injury for the driver than an enclosed four-wheeled vehicle like a sedan, being prepared and driving safely can help alleviate the possibility of getting involved in an accident. It would be better to hire a motorcycle injury attorney just in case something wrong had occurred.
