Qualify for a restaurant loan with Visa/Mastercard by Mathias Scott

Article published on May 14th 2012 | Loans

The restaurant business is a tough one considering the kind of competition one has. Being able to raise funds when needed fast, is often a necessity. But if you are a restaurant business with a bad credit history then getting a commercial restaurant loan can be rather tough for you. But if you accept Visa or Mastercard at your establishment, then there is still some hope for you. Accepting these two popular forms of payment instantly gives you eligibility for a business cash advance. This is a lumpsum that is given to you based on future sales. The repayment is done on a pre-determined percentage basis making things rather easy for you.

Acquiring such a loan is rather simple. You need to fill out an online application and submit documents that give an overview of your credit card returns on a monthly basis. You should be able to clock in around $5000 in terms of payments made. You will also need to have been in business for a minimum of nine months. Business cash advances are not considered loans by the lenders, rather they are looked at as business deals. It is viewed as you buying a part of your future sales and making a repayment as and when you get the money in.

When compared to a commercial loan, it works out much easier for you. There is no restriction on how you can use the money. The time frame in which you receive it is much faster than it would take for a commercial loan to come through. The repayment is based on a pre-determined percentage of your sales each month. You are also given a flexible time frame ranging from six months to a year to clear the loan. Should you feel you need more time, then this can be discussed. Additionally if you manage to clear half your loan without a delay, you will be able to qualify for a top up amount and an extension on the repayment time frame. This gives you much more flexibility in your use of the money.

Such loans are increasingly becoming popular and have opened the doors for several businesses that have been floundering. Often a great deal of potential is lost when a restaurant is unable to finance itself in the initial few months of its existence. Such quick loans can be just the shot in the arm that you need.
