Article Side

A quick look at the all-new CX-5 by Anthony Blascara

Article published on November 28th 2011 | Marketing

As a manufacturer with a reputation of building reliable and stylish cars itâ€™s not surprising that the has grabbed a lot of attention since it was unveiled at the Frankfurt Motor Show in September.

The sleek and stylish compact SUV is the first Mazda car to feature the new KODO â€˜Soul of Motionâ€™ design language and it certainly benefits from it. From all angles the Mazda CX-5 is a handsome beast, managing to look aggressive yet suitable all at the same time.

But itâ€™s not just the exterior of this exciting new SUV that provides something to write home about. Under that new nose lies a 2.2litre sequential turbo diesel power block that really delivers on the power front, with two different versions offering up 147bhp and 173bhp respectively. It will also be available with a straight 2.0litre petrol engine that will churn out a very smooth 162bhp when called upon.

The Mazda CX-5 also carries very good eco credentials, with the lower-powered 2.2litre sequential engine puffing out just 119g/km of Co2 on its travels. Itâ€™s also very considerate to its driver, as trips to the pumps look like they will be significantly lower than some of its rivals. Fuel consumption for the entry-level diesel engine with front wheel drive is a healthy 63 mpg â€“ more than enough to take the kids to school, go shopping or whatever it is you do in SUVs.

In fact, considering how little youâ€™ll be at petrol stations should you buy one, treat yourself and get a scotch egg when you are eventually required to give it a little drink.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/marketing-articles/a-quick-look-at-the-all-new-cx-5.htm - Article Side

Anthony Blascara - About Author:
Anthony Blascara is a writer and fan of thea Mazda CX-5

Article Keywords:
Mazda CX-5

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!