Mesothelioma is a rare and malignant type of cancer that affects the tissue lining of many internal organs including the heart, lungs, and abdominal cavity. The following list of frequently asked questions and answers may provide a better understanding of this disease.

Who is at risk for mesothelioma?

All patients diagnosed with mesothelioma have a history of asbestos exposure at home or at work. If you have worked in an asbestos mine or in an industry that used asbestos materials, you are most likely at risk. Since asbestos is cheap and a good material for insulation, it was used extensively in the 1930s to the 1970s. Some industries that used asbestos include mills, mines, automotive manufacturers, construction and shipbuilding industries.

What are the most common symptoms?

Early mesothelioma symptoms are generally absent in patients. If they are apparent, they are typically similar to the symptoms of other common ailments. These symptoms include coughing or wheezing, shortness of breath, chest pain, night sweats, swelling of feet, and weight loss. A chest x-ray could show build up of fluid in the lungs or chest.

Why is it difficult to diagnose?

There are two reasons why it is hard to diagnose mesothelioma. First, as mentioned above, mesothelioma symptoms mirror other diseases like bronchitis or pneumonia. Second, in most cases, it takes decades for this disease to develop. It may even be up to 15 to 30 years, or more, after exposure to asbestos fibers that symptoms begin to appear.

I may have been exposed to asbestos. What should I do?

Even if you are not showing mesothelioma symptoms, you should visit your physician to get a medical examination and determine if you have developed mesothelioma or another asbestos-related disease. If you are diagnosed with mesothelioma, you may want to seek financial compensation from the responsible party for medical bills and lost wages. In this case, you may want to contact a mesothelioma lawyer for legal counsel.

How can mesothelioma attorneys help?

These attorneys possess years of experience in this area of law. They fully understand the technical aspects and other realities of mesothelioma cases. These attorneys might be your best chance to receive justice and financial compensation for your suffering.

What should you expect from mesothelioma attorneys?

Most mesothelioma attorneys work on a contingency fee basis. This means they are not paid unless they win the case. To better determine the probability of a settlement, lawyers like those from Baron and Budd, P.C. may work on your claim individually.

Is Baron and Budd the best legal option for me?

When choosing mesothelioma attorneys, you should evaluate experience and reputation. Baron and Budd has a solid track record of successful verdicts and settlements. You can learn more about Baron and Budd by visiting their website at www.mesotheliomanews.com.
