Choosing a Used Piano by Mary Porter

Article published on June 21st 2012 | Music

Whether you're a beginner just starting to learn the piano or an experienced professional piano player a used piano is a great choice. If you're looking to purchase a piano but don't have the budget for a brand new one then most second ones are just as good. Second hand pianos open up the piano market to many people who thought that owning a piano would be impossible due to the cost. A piano is a lovely instrument to learn to play at any age and if you have children you may want to encourage them to learn to play or they may be keen to learn themselves. If this is the case then the best way for them to learn is to have their own piano at home so they can practice whenever they can. A used piano is ideal for beginners as you won't have as much outlay as a new piano and if you decide you don't enjoy playing you can sell it on again without losing too much money.

There are many companies who sell new and used piano products and some may offer a buy back plan so you can trade it in for a newer model in a few years. Second hand pianos are available in many different styles. Pianos are made from quality hard wood and come in a variety of colours, sizes and designs. Grand pianos are one of the most elegant piano designs and if you just want a used piano for decorative purposes at home or for commercial use then you should choose grand second hand pianos to create a real wow factor.

The cost of a used piano will depend on the quality of the piano and also its design. If you're not fussy about the look of the piano and are more interested in how it plays then you can pick up a real bargain used piano. Retailers of new and second hand pianos will also tend to offer other services such as piano restoration and piano servicing and repair to keep your used piano in top condition.
