Article published on January 31st 2012 | Music

It can be easily said that music licensing companies are God's greatest gift on Earth for the thousands of musicians who are passionate about their music. These companies make sure that those musicians who create music and compose songs get paid for their work. That is why the music licensing companies are also considered to be Messiahs for the musicians.

People love to hear music. Some original scores go on to become massive hits with the listeners. People start thronging the concerts of those musicians who deliver smash hits and chartbusters. Other people may try to benefit from this popularity by reproducing those same music for the audience (although they are not the original creators). To stop this from taking place music licensing is implemented to make sure that only the original creator gets the credit.

Music licensing companies are the people who are responsible to regulate the buying and selling of the music rights every day. Music right is the right to use a music as and when required. Just by the selling of the music rights, a musician can generate more than enough money than he could have possibly made performing at a concert. For example the famous song "Happy Birthday to You" helps AOL Time Warner to earn around $2million each year through music licensing. AOL Time Warner is the current copyright owner of this famous jingle.

Most music lovers in general are of the opinion that easy access to the net is actually a curse for music industry. Given the fact that most listeners would love to download free music rather than buying CDs, people have started to think that the music industry is suffering terrible loss. But that is actually not the case. Music licensing companies are helping the music to go on.

Music licensing is basically selling the music to the other businesses or media. As such your music can be used by them for any of their projects. And you have nothing to lose. If your music gets played at a restaurant, on the TV, at a café, radio or at a shopping mall, then you will be paid performance royalties. And if your music is used as an ad jingle then you can easily make millions.

Music licensing companies employ professionals to take care of the paper work and maintain a huge database of thousands of music from all possible genres. Once you register your copyrights, the licensing companies will help you get your royalty checks.
