For some pet owners, cute and cuddly just doesnâ€™t cut the cheese, and may opt for a more exotic nimal, like a Royal Python, or a Bearded Dragon, or even a Tarantula, due to many owners finding them aesthetically pleasing and an asset to their home.

Reptiles may look good in a home, however, they require a lot of care and attention, as reptiles need to be kept at a certain temperature, and their habitats need to resemble their original home in the wild.

It can be daunting if you are a first time reptile keeper; however, there is a increasingly wide range of Reptile Care Guides and Reptile Starter Kits. There is also â€˜Beginner Friendlyâ€™ reptile brands such as Exo Terra or Pro-Rep Supplies, so that a beginner reptile keeper need not feel out of their depth.

Different types of reptiles may require different  types of set-ups, for examples, a Bearded Dragon may require a much more hotter climate than a Water Dragon, as the two lizards come from completely different climates.

Live Food and Frozen Food is also an essential for many reptiles, so the correct equipment is required to be able to feed your reptile safely, and without causing injury or harm to the reptiles or the owner.

There is also a range of Reptile Accessories available for your reptile, such as a harness for walks, and Water Conditioner and Reptile Friendly cleaners so you can clean your reptileâ€™s habitat without the worry of harsh chemicals harming your reptile.
