An album that captures all by Eric Bryantrs

Article published on May 22nd 2012 | Photography

Photographers will of course capture all those important moments that make up your wedding. But there are several other memories too that need to be captured. Those candid moments just before you walk the aisle, throwing off those cold feet when you stand at the altar, taking in that feeling once you are pronounced man and wife. There is so much that you experience on that day and if you have the right kind of photographer you will have all those images captured for posterity.

There are several means in which you can settle on the kind of wedding photography in Blackburn, Lancashire that you need. More often than not, you would have liked the work of an individual on a friendâ€™s wedding and you would want the same for yours. Even then, with the world going online, you can always ask them to show you more samples so that you get a feel of how the photographer works.

Photography today is a blend of several styles and you may want to have a mix of them all â€“ having a photographer who understands when to use a digital and when a manual, what would look good in black and white and what would do with a technical addition of color is very important.

Speak to the photographer about what you expect. This will help both of you get a feel of each other and develop rapport which will be necessary for you to tap on D Day. You will also want to inform the photographer of the way you expect him to present himself on the day at the venue. Weddings at places like the Stanley House expect a level of decorum and you will want to ensure that it is not breached. Themes will also change based on where you plan to have the wedding â€“ places like Saddleworth Hotel and Herons Reach Hotel are among the more contemporary places for a wedding.

Once you have settled on your photographer the next is to discuss what you expect from your wedding album. You will want to discuss how the pictures will be presented to you for viewing. How copies can be ordered, how many days till you are able to see it and the like. A contract outlining all of these details is essential, especially if your photographer is out of town and or has another engagement to get to.

You can be rest assured then that you will get all that you need on your wedding day.
