There are so many dimensions to documentary filmmaking that it is not possible to clearly define its boundaries. What is essential to documentary filmmaking is that the theme as well as the tale should be non-fictional. Scottish documentarian John Grierson held that cinemaâ€™s potential for observing life could be exploited in a new art form. Some have defined documentary filmmaking as â€˜creative treatment of actualityâ€™ â€“ a definition which has gained currency. This aspect is often explo by corporate film makers in Delhi to sell concepts and build corporate and brand image.

Some other thinkers further state that a documentary stands out from the other types of non-fiction films for providing an opinion, and a specific message, along with the facts it presents. Documentary filmmaking refers to what people do with media devices, content, form, and production strategies in order to address the creative, ethical, and conceptual problems and choices that arise as they make documentaries. Usually corporate film makers in Delhi try to utilize this medium to create marketing videos for client viewership. The main aim of videos is to give a real life feel to the occasion or business being carried out, so the viewers get involved in what they are seeing and take back a piece of the same with them.

There is more to corporate videos than simply exercises in marketing. Corporate film makers in Delhi understand that when a company has offices scattered around the globe, then videos are a smart way of conveying the same message to the personnel. You can show the same video to employees in different locations, cities, time zones, or even countries. Getting your training message across also becomes much easier. Employees can watch the video from their computer screens and can get involved with it if there are adequate interactivity elements added in. Corporate film makers in Delhi that videos can be stylish and creative and yet tell a story or convey a message effectively.
