I find it extremely funny that I am hooked on reading digital slr camera reviews after I have bought my DSLR last week. The good thing is that it reaffirms what the sales assistant told me prior to unboxing it for the first time. The bad is finding out that it was cheaper at some other store. One of the cool sections of this digital slr camera reviews site I am checking out is that the users share where to find gear at more affordable prices.

It is such a shame that I was not able to spot this while I was scanning through digital slr camera reviews without really reading the text. So here is a tip for all of you with intentions of buying an expensive item: research, research, research. I would be lying if I said I was not disappointed upon finding out that I could have bought my camera somewhere else with at least $100 off the price, but there is nothing I could do as finding a store that sells it cheaper is not a ground for refunds and exchanges. The least I can do is to remind everyone to be a wise buyer, whatever product you buy or service you avail.
