3 Great Tips on Link Building by Andrew Isiah

Article published on December 20th 2011 | Seo

When you own your own website, you are always looking for the next means to enhance your website, and increase its ranking on search engine results pages. Although the principle link building tools have been around for several years, people coming to the industry are totally new and could never have heard any tips on link building that they feel may be applied to their own website.

One of the principles of the internet is that it should be a free access point for information, so for anybody who has not heard how to create links for your site, here are 3 tips on link building that may help you on your way.

1) Find Your Demographic

Before you start using link building tools, you must assess who your viewers and where they can be found. If you have a website regarding cats and cat products, for example, you might not need to place all of your links on websites committed to dogs and birds. You furthermore may want to understand your people: so you may perhaps not put your cat website links on a website dedicated to video games. Sensible thinking over who you are aiming your website at could help enormously when you are making your links.

2) Use Link Building Tools

Make the most out of what the web has to offer by using link building tools as much as possible. These are sites such as bookmarking websites that enable you to place links back to your own web pages. Ensure that you have some great content to post there, or your links won't get the recognition they deserve. You should even try to avoid over-spamming your links to these sites, as you are probably to get a smack over the head by Google, as it has become very firm regarding spamming, link buying and different pessimistic behaviors that avoid people from finding the pages that they select.

3) Use Created Content to Add Links

There are lots of places that accept user-created content and these may be perfect link building tools. Sites like Facebook and twitter, or even Squidoo and HubPages could be great. Make sure that you have something interesting to write about, and keep links modest and to the point, and you must be able to make some nice links back to your website from these pages. They might not count for a great deal when it comes to advertising, but these sorts of things may really help you to improve your rank on search engines.
