Everyone has been here at least once –

A long line has formed at the checkout counter of your favorite shopping mall retailer. It's your turn to checkout, and you approach the register. They ring your items up and you dig through your purse or wallet to find the coupon you'd like to use only to find that it's either missing or completely destroyed. You didn't bring enough with you to purchase the item at full-price, so now, you must leave empty handed.

This is a scenario that is played out over and over again during the holiday season. Because so many consumers are working on tight budgets, coupons have become an industry standard when making purchase decisions. But, the issues that arise when dealing with paper coupons can be embarrassing, frustrating, and at times, downright annoying. The online marketplace can provide a reprieve from these troubles, as promo codes eliminate the need for keeping track of coupons or spending countless hours browsing the Sunday paper or various mailers you receive!

The Comfort of Knowing

Knowing that your discount is ready to go while making your purchase can really put you at ease when shopping. Promotional codes are the perfect solution to –cutting coupons– without the –cutting. You can find a retailer or product discount code that you like, immediately visit the retailer, checkout with the online portal, and receive the discount immediately. There are no mail-in rebates or special actions necessary. All you have to do is copy and paste the promo number that is included with the coupon. In some cases, even this isn't necessary, as the link you click through the coupon will automatically provide the discount upon checkout.

Even Printable Coupons are Cumbersome

When it comes to digital bargains, some coupons are printable, but even this can quickly become a hassle. Let's assume that you are printing the discount code and heading straight to the retailer to redeem it. There are still a number of things that can happen along the way. First, it is costing you printing supplies (ink and paper) which are not exactly cheap these days. Additionally, if the code number or barcode smudges between your home and the retailer, you'll have to head back and print another one. A bit of water on your inked coupon printout can put you in the precarious situation that we outlined earlier. Avoid this completely by simply clicking a link or copying a promo code and visiting the same retailer online. You'll be glad you did, and you can do it all in your bunny slippers.

Never Leave Empty-Handed

When you have a physical coupon, you have to redeem it at a brick and mortar location. You may get ready, drive out to the local shopping mall, and browse the store only to learn that the item you are looking for isn't carried at this particular location or has completely sold-out. Promo codes give you the same great value found by bargain hunters cutting coupons without any of the negative possibilities that come along with it.

The online shopping community has been taking advantage of retailer coupon codes for years, but the implementation of the practice is just beginning to reach its potential. Websites that compile a variety of industry offerings are available, and by using their integrated searching facility, you can find products or retailers that suit your tastes or needs. Don't get stuck at the checkout counter searching your pockets for a coupon that didn't survive the trip. Instead, use the digital technology available to get the best discounts available without ever leaving your home.
