Brass Knuckles were initially introduced for using as a handle for knives that were used for military fighting purposes. The finger holes provided in this equipment offer additional grip and security and maximum pushing power as well. When two people are engaged in knife or hand fight, the striking power can be boosted with the help of the knuckle guard. Different types of this equipment are sold these days and irrespective of the type, they are made out of solid piece of metal.

The most common of its type is made out of brass, aluminum or other similar alloys. The four open loops provided in the device are designed with a view to fit around the fingers. When the fingers of the user are clasped, the inside of the handle of brass knuckle knives are curved for fitting comfortably into the palm. The outside ring present in the knuckles normally is smooth and flat. Even some models are offered with four raised pavilions or burrs for maximizing the damage when striking.

Of the different styles, the ring style knuckles is popular and the rings can be placed in the index and middle finger. These are employed in combination with an appropriate striking technique thereby landing the first two knuckles onto the target. Even though they are smaller in size, they can optimize the damage from a strike that is properly executed.

Another common style is spiked brass models and these are dangerous weapons in such a way that some governments have banned its usage as illegal. They normally have minimum four to maximum six screw holes for varied sizes of sharpened metal spikes. Even they are offered with fixed spikes of minimum an inch or even greater length. When a person strikes using this equipment, there will be puncture wounds in the body of the opponent and they are made with the purpose of maiming or killing an opponent.

Another model of brass knuckle knives is the jeweled brass knuckles and this type is based on the frame of other types, however they are offered with raised jewels that look like the user wearing four large wrings in his hand. Another purpose solved by them is the user can hide the weapon or they can make the wearing of weapon appear discrete. Even brass knuckles are worn as trendy ornaments and so they are used neither for defensive nor for offensive purposes.

Nowadays, some of the online stores are selling these items online and the purchaser can conveniently purchase them from home.
