

Article Side

Fighting Drink Driving and other traffic offences by Archer

Article published on May 17th 2012 | Society

If you get done for traffic offenses then this is something that can in some cases be very unfair. While drunk driving is of course a very serious offense and something that you should very much avoid, there are however circumstances under which it's understandable. For instance it's important to note that there is really no clear cut advice on what the legal limit is "as the amount of alcohol in your blood is dependent on many different factors" including your size and weight and even how much you've had to eat or drink that day. You might very easily then end up being drunk because you drank just a pint or just half a glass of wine when normally that would be fine. Likewise you might find that you're still technically over the legal limit the next morning when you didn't realize.

And at the same time there are also many other traffic offenses that very realistically might not be your fault. For instance, perhaps you have been done for speeding when the speeding limit wasn't easily and clearly marked.

And even when you did simply break the law, it may be the case that losing your license could make it incredibly difficult for you to live. If you have to take your children to school every morning, or if you need to commute to work, or if you have a disabled partner, you might find that you simply can't afford another traffic ticket. So how can you fight it?

First of all you need to make sure that you take every possible precaution to avoid getting a ticket. With regards to drink driving for instance you need to make sure that you take every possible precaution to avoid driving over the limit. This means for instance making sure that you simply don't drink and drive. Seeing as there is confusion regarding the legal limits, it's safest to simply avoid driving at all when you're drinking "just ask for a lemonade.

Likewise be certain to be very careful with speeding limits and with stop signs and you can also invest in a GPS system that can warn you about lights and cameras.

But if you still find yourself with a traffic ticket, then you might want to consider using traffic lawyers. They can help to make a case for you to get away without points on your license or without paying the fine, by appealing to your life circumstances, or by pointing out things that the police offer did wrong, or discrepancies with the signage that might have realistically resulted in your making the mistake.

For instance if you should be caught speeding, but it transpires that the sign with the speed limit was obstructed by a branch from a tree, then this can be enough to help you get away without paying a fine. Likewise you might find that you are able to get out of the speeding ticket even if it's the road name that isn't properly marked. Similarly if the police officer didn't correctly identify themselves then this can work in your favour too.

Article Source:

<http://www.articleside.com/society-articles/fighting-drink-driving-and-other-traffic-offences.htm> - Article Side

Archer - About Author:

If you are looking for a Traffic lawyers Melbourne then you are in the right place, a click here on the given links to find out more information about company.

Article Keywords:
Traffic lawyers, lawyers

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!