How to Trade the Commitment of Traders? by Lan Turner

Article published on December 22nd 2011 | Software

For several new traders getting a sight into the brain of their fellow traders might be worthless asset. One of the ways in which you can accomplish this from something called Commitment of Traders Report. This report, the COT, provides interested parties an insight in the present trading situation of the many participants. The Commitment of Traders looks at the public interest in trading markets where over 20 traders currently hold stock worth more than the levels established by the Commodity futures trading commission.

This Report is divided into three different parts: the commercial traders, the large-company traders, and very small, sometimes solo traders. By reporting on the actions of those three trading sectors, the report helps beginner investors to find out how markets move and from this they could start to trade more effectively. Taking the raw info from the Commodity futures trading commission is just the starting of learning how to read it and totally understand it. For example, if you need to actually understand a way to manage the Futures Trading Commission report, then you will perhaps need some assistance in interpreting such raw information.

One way to do this is to utilise an online guide to doing so. There are weekly newsletters from professional traders that help you to break down the raw info into manageable details on the current actions of traders. In those newsletters, the author could break the information down into subjects such as Forex markets or futures trading and then make charts which assist beginners to read the data easily. You may also get guidance about how the data suggests what the markets could do in the next some years. Such reports are never cheap, and generally can cost hundreds of dollars for a one-year subscription.

Another way to do this is to buy software which will assist you to break down the information and then invest as the software suggests. One such piece of software is the Commitment of Trader's Software, but you can even find futures trading software programs that will break down the COT and then apply it to futures trading.

Once you have bought this software, you may not need to buy it again, so it is a one-off investment, unlike the newsletters. You may even find that the software facilitates you to know the report better, teaching you ways to break it down for yourself rather than just giving you the complete charts. By using software, you may also get direct leads to commodities and futures that can be traded, instead of relying upon the suggestions of a professional.
