Apart from developing and marketing software, there is one more area where Microsoft, the software giant put its signature. And that is a vital aspect that keeps the faith of people in the brand to let the momentum continue. Just imagine whatâ€™s that? Think, what happens, when the Internet Explorer encounters a sudden problem, the system hard-disk becomes cluttered with files and programs, and program accessibility becomes a puzzling task, or the machine creeps due to viruses and spyware? Amidst all these frantic situations, you are never left alone, Microsoft comes with a solution either in the form of Network or Internet troubleshooter, Disc Defragmenter, Disc Cleanup, Microsoft Security Essentials, Microsoft Online Security Scanner, etc.

Moreover the operating system houses performance or security monitoring tools like Windows Performance Monitor: to keep a record of the performance of the application and hardware performance in real time, Action Center/Security Center: to monitor the security status of the system, and more, to let you sail smooth.

All this can be visualized as the belligerent approach of Microsoft Support to empower people to make the max from its technologies. This is the area where it beats others and stays out of the crowd. Every version of Windows operating system has been bestowed with the restore utility to let you bounce from any unpleasant errors with Windows. For instance Windows NT Backup - Restore Utility was shipped with Windows XP, Windows Server 2003, Windows Vista and Microsoft Windows Server 2008. In Windows 7 it has been packed with System Recover Options that can be accessed from the Windows Boot Menu probably with F8 function key. Apart from the Microsoft provided system recovery options, your computer manufacturer may also come up with recovery partition. Almost all popular vendors like Dell, HP, Acer, etc. come up with their recovery option to address frequent software and hardware errors.

Ignoring the Microsoft Fix It Solution Center will be an injustice here. This is a personalized tool that is compatible to diagnose problems with all Microsoft software.
