Article published on December 23rd 2011 | Software

Getting your computers slow gradually with time is a common issue with all types of computers. When considering specifically for the Sony computers, similar to other computer brands, these are also prone to speed loss and degrade in performance. For these problems and other related problems that occur in Sony computers, many computer support companies offer Sony vaio support services for their customers. These Sony help and support services include the software installations, error troubleshooting, driver updates and installation, security scans and check-ups, and so on.

Coming back to the speed loss and system slow down in Sony computers, these may occur gradually with time. However, there can be many other reasons also for the Sony computers running slow and becoming time consuming. Some of them are discussed here:

In-sufficient Memory:

The most prominent reason for the Sony computers getting slow is in sufficient memory. With passing time, you may install more number of software and programs that may acquire most of the hard disk space. This may cause a shortage of memory for additional running of programs, which may lead to speed loss. Sometimes, it may also prevent the computer from even starting up.

In this situation, you need to either defrag the hard disk to gather more disk space, or perform a recovery using the System Recovery tool. As these steps may sometimes become complicated, itâ€™s better to take help from tech support companies offering Sony vaio help and support. The tech support executives help you in saving more and more amount of your personal data during the recovery process. They help you save all the important data in the Backup and Restore Center available in Sony computers, followed by the system recovery. This is a better way of saving important data, as copying data on CD/ DVD or other external storage devices is always risky in terms of safety and storage space.

Virus Infections:

Another reason for the Sony laptop computers running slow may be the viruses. If your Sony computer gets infected with viruses or other harmful malicious programs, these may lead to your system slow down and performance loss. These viruses can get into your computer by internet through corrupt downloaded internet files, or through corrupted external storage devices like pen drives.

In order to resolve this issue, you need to update your computer security. This includes the installation of effective antivirus software on your Sony notebook, followed by a complete computer scan. For better security, taking help from the tech supports offering Sony customer support is also preferable. The tech support experts help in selecting the best antivirus software that is capable of removing viruses. They also help with the firewall configuration for added security. After the successful installation of antivirus softwares, these technicians also perform the computer scan and help in quarantining or removing harmful viruses to protect the computer. In order to ensure maximum virus protection, these technical experts also update your antivirus software with latest antivirus updates, or upgrade the antivirus to the advanced versions.

Compatibility Issue:

There can be one more reason for the Sony computers running slow: Compatibility issue. Many times, it happens that particular software you want to install is not compatible to your system. Same is the case with the computer hardware parts. Many times, the computer components like printers, or other computer within a network, are incompatible among themselves. This causes the malfunctioning of the computer, which leads to slow computer speed and poor performance.
