Horse racing ages back to the 18th and 19th centuries when it was considered a noble sport and a pastime for only the rich. Horse racing till date retains its popularity and has keen observers. Betting on horses is a great way to kill time and have fun and if you can do all the while earning some quick bucks, what better way is there. You can win a lot of money betting on horses provided you bet on the right horse. From merely a game, horse racing has evolved into a semi profession where there are professional bidders on the ground.

Since horse racing is a gamble, a lot depends on luck. However, it is not only about that. A keen sense of horsemanship, an interest in the game and a good eye are very important to be able to make money off horse betting. Contrary to popular belief, horse racing is not the place for only professional betters. People with a genuine interest in racing also go to such competitions and gatherings so that they can gather some racing tips and learn something valuable.

Freshers are usually advised to start with placing very small bets and simply observing the first few races they go to. Races are a great place to gather information from others and you can often get very valuable information and racing tips simply by mixing and talking with the people present there. There are also lots of people at the racing grounds who offer information for money. It is better to avoid such people unless you perhaps know them personally or have heard of them from someone reliable. Such informants usually donâ€™t know too much about racing or if they do, never actually give out genuine information. They do this simply to earn a few quick bucks.

Wagering and betting on horses is an art as much as it is fun. There is a particular way to approach it but you never know what might work out. You need to take a call based on your gut feeling. Horse racing tips are available on the internet and there are innumerous books on the subject to help you gain some knowledge. But no book or website on the internet can give you the knowledge or experience that you will gain from actually attending and betting on horses in a race. Wagering is like making an investment and therefore you need to be very careful about how to use your money. Take knowledge backed guesses and calculated risks so that you donâ€™t lose money.

When you are just starting, it is better to not be too adventurous until you have learnt the ropes of how horse racing works. Watch races on the television, keep track of horse racing on the internet, familiarize yourself with the horses and keep up to date with which horse wins. If possible, try and mingle with those who frequent such horse races and try and get them to give you tips. Nothing works better than a knowledgeable friend telling you where to put your money. Thorough knowledge about the sport is very helpful if you want to actually earn some money placing bets on horses. Along with that, you need to be patient and keep a look out on what is happening on the ground.
