Southfields is a pretty district in the suburbs of Wandsworth, in south-west London. Itâ€™s close by to Wimbledon and Putney, which are both very well known areas; Wimbledon is, of course, home to the annual tennis tournament, and Putney is home of the boat race between Oxford and Cambridge Universities. Both of these events attract thousands of people from around London and from the rest of the United Kingdom; some even travel from abroad to visit these summertime competitions. Around this period, Southfields taxis see a huge spike in their business.

Because the neighbouring areas are so popular, the prices are generally higher; when you visit a hotel or a restaurant, you expect to pay more in central London than you would in the suburbs. For this reason, many prefer to stay somewhere like Southfields during a visit to London. It can actually be a relief not to be right in the middle of the hustle and bustle all the time, which is inescapable when youâ€™re in the city or in Westminster! Although itâ€™s exciting and energising to be in the thick of all, especially when youâ€™re not used to being in a big city, having accommodation within easy travelling distance gives you the best of both worlds. A taxi to Southfields from the city centre is quick and affordable, so a lot of visitors choose to do this.

For those who commute regularly and like to use public transport as well as Southfield taxis, there is also a tube station here on the District Line. Itâ€™s just a few stops away from Earls Court (where you can change for central London locations), and the line has stops at other popular areas including High Street Kensington, Embankment and Tower Hill. London Underground services donâ€™t run overnight, so the other option is to take a bus; make sure you check the timetables before you travel so youâ€™re not left waiting all night!
