Wedding Venues

by Carolyn Ann Clayton

Article published on January 4th 2012 | Weddings

Wedding is a magic word which symbolises the unison of lovers. Though it is said that marriages are made in heaven, the truth is that it happens in a convention centre or a church or other religious location. The venue type will depend on the belief of the family, but wherever it is held in a church or on a beach, weddings will be filled with relatives and friends all happy to become the audience and share in the joy of the celebration.

The wedding venue is a serious concern with a location that is suitable for the wedding party and guests that wish to attend. With families often split up around the countries getting the location right is paramount.

Finding the right venue is easier these days with the power of the internet. You can search for venues and by location with a good search engine such as Google. Venues tend to get booked up a good few months before the wedding sometimes up to 6 months. Knowing how many guests will help at this stage even if you donâ€™t have the exact figure. Booking the venue well in advance will avoid a last-minute chaos.

Some of the various venues which a wedding can take place are:

A beach wedding:

This is the most fun filled serene wedding where the whole set up and arrangements are made on a beach. There are many beautiful beaches around the world and many of the top hotels have steps in place for the perfect beach wedding.

A church wedding:

The most traditional location for wedding is of course a church. The authenticity of church is definitely unbeatable. The holiness can be felt directly in the ambience of the building.

A register office wedding:

A very common way to get married nowadays is the register office. This is ideal for the couples who want to get married in a very low profile or those who want to marry without their parents consent, and of course those with less financial stability may prefer a register wedding.

An Island wedding:

The popularity is increasing for this form of private wedding which is preferred by families. They invite selected guests for the wedding in the islands and it happens to preserve the privacy rather than making the whole function a very public affair attracting news.

A Castle wedding:

Getting wed in a castle is the most royal feeling ever. Not only is it a very costly affair but also makes the day very special.

A sporting wedding:

Golf course and club houses provide a sporty wedding ambience. They play a perfect host to bespoke weddings for members and non-members alike, ensuring your wedding reflects your individual personality and style.

Everybody wants their wedding to be as unique as possible. And hence the location for wedding changes according to the uniqueness of the wedding.
