Cellulite â€“ every womanâ€™s nightmare. No matter how much you exercise, irrespective of what your diet is, you can still develop cellulite.

And with summer fast approaching, the best time to have anti-cellulite treatments is now. But first, what is cellulite, whom does it affect and how will you eliminate it?

What is Cellulite?

Cellulite could be a description for dimpled skin round the thigh, pelvis and other areas of the body. Cellulite is there in 80%-90% of women past puberty. So odds are, even when you donâ€™t have cellulite now, youâ€™ll have it in the near future (read on for information on new cellulite laser technology).

While many women begin developing cellulite, they mistakenly believe it has to do with their diet plan or exercise routines. Although both of those can have an effect on the development of cellulite, theyâ€™re not the cause or the solution.

Yes, normal exercise could assist diminish the cellulite â€“ to some degree. However, even the most active and healthy women could still have one or the other visible remnants. Because of this, if you find yourself developing cellulite, it still is important to modify your diet and exercise routines, but realize this isnâ€™t the final solution.

Until recently diet, exercise and topical creams and lotions were the most effective solutions we had. But, the revolutionary new cellulite treatment called Cellulaze has quickly established itself as the only answer that may take away the vast majority of visible cellulite.

Enter Cellulaze

Before Cellulaze, the best cosmetic surgeons in New York City had very restricted choices for dealing with cellulite. Usually, theyâ€™d prescribe lotions or other on-the-surface treatments intended to reduce the appearance of cellulite.

However, thanks to breakthrough technology, we now have a far better means to fight cellulite: Cellulaze. It's the first and only FDA approved simply invasive treatment for cellulite.

What makes this technology different? Well, letâ€™s take a look at what the other â€œtreatmentsâ€• do. Surface on-the-surface treatments target the specific surface dimples. They do nothing to treat the actual issue â€“ whatâ€™s occurring underneath the skin.

This is exactly what Cellulaze does. It targets the inner anatomical issue of cellulite, instead of working on only the surface irregularities. Because of this, the outcome of this action are so much more preferable last longer than any other currently known treatment. Additionally, the treatment is relatively easy and is pretty safe, guaranteeing that irrespective of who you are or what your condition is, it can work for you.
